Old Testament.

Do most people really know what they are talking about? Are their statements based on true facts and sound reasoning? Do they display scientific investigation, logical thinking, and unbiased opinions? Let us stop and consider some of the statements and opinions we often hear voiced so emphatically.

I overheard this statement one day on a streetcar: "These Socialists ought to be locked up for all the trouble they are causing." I wonder if the person who made the statement ever read any literature on Socialism, or had the slightest conception of any of their principles.

Again I heard a similar statement. "Bolsheviks are anarchists." Probably the person who uttered this statement had never read anything authentic about Bolshevism, or had ever been interested enough to inquire anything about them or their doctrines. How many times you have heard a statement to this effect - "Don't ever do business with a Jew, or you will get the worst of the bargain."

You may ask what are our statements and opinions based on and why some people are so opposed to certain principles and why others are strongly in favor of them. I used to wonder myself, yet through the study of Psychology some of my wonderment has ceased. At least I know now that Psychology is a beacon of light on the sea of doubt and perplexity of why we think and speak as we do. In other words, what forces and factors have contributed to form our attitudes?

I shall make an attempt to show how our attitudes are formed and how our speech and thoughts are influenced by them.

As the study of attitudes is such a vast subject it seemed wiser and more convincing to confine this thesis to the attitudes on five sutjects rather widely and popularly discussed to-day. Therefore I have chosen Socialism, Communism, Atheism, Capitalism and Bolshevism as my five subjects and have endeavored to determine by an investigation the relationship between knowledge and tolerance which will show you the respective attitudes of various groups on these subjects.

Before discussing either opinions or attitudes at any length there is one factor that has to be considered at some length, as it plays a tremendous role in influencing our attitudes both consciously and unconsciously, and that is the factor of prejudice. We may say that adverse opinion is akin to prejudice and tolerance indicates a lack of prejudice.

We may say that adverse opinion is akin to prejudice and tolerance indicates a lack of prejudice.

None of us perhaps realizes to what a great extent prejudice affects and colors all human behavior. On account of its subtlety it plays a vital part in our lives and is often difficult to recognize; yet by careful analysis into most aspects of human behavior and keen observation we can often detect the reasons for many of our prejudices.

What is prejudice? First of all prejudice is a judgment or an opinion formed ahead of time. It is an opinion that is both illogical and biased. Prejudices resemble "fixed ideas" or a complex on some subject which is manifested by narrow-mindedness, bigotry and fanaticism. It may also be termed monoideaism, which means one idea. The mind is tilted in one direction in exclusion of other ideas.

Josiah Morse defines prejudice as "undue prepossession in favor of or against some person, theory, or idea as a mental cramp or tension which renders an individual unable to see or consider anything but from a single point of view." (1) We find that the prejudiced person is obstinate and stubborn and he is often impossible to convince. The old saying - "He convinced against his will is of the same opinion still" is very true as far as prejudice is concerned.

The result is that we do not look at things clearly - prejudice becomes a disordered apperception. It is just like looking at everything with rosy glasses one day and the next day looking at the same things with black glasses. We don't learn to distinguish accurately. The old saying of "none are so blind as those who won't see" is certainly correct.

Prejudice is usually tinged with strong emotional feeling. We are influenced by our emotions rather than by our reason. This is very evident in our everyday life. We refuse to believe anything detrimental about our family or friends but are always ready to believe the slightest insinuation about our enemies although it may be entirely unfounded. How many examples of this type of prejudice we see in the political world. The Republicans delight in passing disparaging remarks about the Democrats and vice-versa. We become conditioned toward certain words or terms and the mere suggestion of any of them immediately plays on our emotions and our prejudices are displayed. Recall some of the political speeches made in the last campaign and you will remember that their entire structure with their emotionally toned words and phrases was based on the primacy of each party.

Prejudice is a social menace and is the cause of many of our conflicts and hatreds. The prejudiced person is bigoted and very intolerant. It gives rise to feelings of superiority especially about one's own group in all of its particular phases.

Prejudice is a social menace and is the cause of many of our conflicts and hatreds. The prejudiced person is bigoted and very intolerant. It gives rise to feelings of superiority especially about one's own group in all of its particular phases.

Let us trace some of the origins of prejudice.

From a Psychological point of view let us call prejudice a conditioned response in which the various lanes of learning function. We react according to our previous experiences of stimulus and response to certain situations. A child has no prejudices except those that have been instilled into him either by his training or the influence of others in his environment. This fact is convincing especially in racial prejudices. A white child will play with a black or yellow child in perfect contentment until the racial and social differences are explained to him by his parents or elders. Early in the child's life we begin to construct for him patterns that will serve as molds for his behavior. The difference of color, of skin, or odor, of voice, or of speech becomes so engrained in us that we look at the stranger with fear and wonderment. Lasker has written a book entitled "Race Attitudes in Children" which shows how prejudice is built up. Witness in our own country the hatred of the negro in the South, the hatred of the Mexican in the West, the hatred of the Jew in New York. I shall discuss the racial projudices a little later in more detail.

It is then safe to say that we don't inherit our prejudices but that we are conditioned to them by our training and environment. A prejudice becomes a habit of thought and a habit is nothing more than the tendency of nerve impulses to follow well worn paths relating to previous experiences. Individuals tend to react in the same manner

Baker has written a book en-titled "Race Attitudes in Children" which shows how preju-dice is built up. Witness in our own country the hatred of the negro in the South, the hatred of the Mexican in the West, the hatred of the Jew in New York. I shall discuss the racial prejudices a little later in more detail.

It is then safe to say that we don't inherit our prejudices but that we are conditioned to them by our train-ing and environment. A prejudice becomes a habit of thought and a habit is nothing more than the tendency of nerve im-pulses to follow well worn paths relating to previous ex-periences. Individuals tend to react in the same manner and thus with every situation that calls out the same response the conditioning becomes stronger which results in the fact that our prejudices become firmer. That is why the older we grow the more difficult it becomes to change our opinions and attitudes unless we understand how they may be reconditioned. The child who is fortunate enough to have been brought up by parents who have escaped from having many prejudices will lead a much happier and broader life than the one whose parents possessed a great many prejudices.

One might ask are there any other factors that our prejudices are based upon besides training and environment. There are several other factors which contribute to our prejudices that are based on cultural and historical forces, such as stereotype patterns, myths and legends. They are the most difficult to recognize and deal with, as one may not be aware of their existence. Bogardus speaks of the "Particularistic Fallacy" which he describes as follows: "Out of false interpretations and from correct analyses of faulty traditions, people construct defective pictures."

When you read many of the essays on the five subjects I have chosen in the body of the thesis you will see how true the above statement is. We tend to generalize on one example or from one experience which we think is typical. How little do we realize how greatly we are influenced by the vast body of folklore and traditions that are handed down to us from generation to generation.

I shall restrict any detailed account of racial prejudices to Anti-Foreigner Prejudice in America. We like to keep our superiority by thinking we are descendants of those who came over in the Mayflower and we are antagonistic toward anyone who can not boast of that distinction. We have stereotype patterns for different groups and judge everyone according to his stereotype pattern. According to us every Jew, every Negro, every Jap is like every other Jew, Negro or Jap.

As Kimball Young has stated (2) this pigeon-holing of persons into certain groups - niggers, wops, kikes, fundamentalists, bolsheviks, radicals, Babbits - is the conventional method of handling those outgroup members who try to break across the barriers of our own in-groups. "It is a constant struggle between the in-group and the out-group and the typical in-group superiority is expressed throughout the struggle." In the schools, in the church, in fact wherever children meet we see the prejudice of the so called "American" and the foreigner. Parents often refuse to send their children to schools in which there is a high foreign percentage. We think of the Germans as monsters who committed so many atrocities during the world war. Economic prejudice is also built up by myths and historical legends accompanied by the conflict of the in-group versus the out-group. The laborer has heard so many tales of the rich employer that he hates all rich employers and blames them all for every kind of economic hardship. Then the employer in his turn is prejudiced against the laborer and considers all laborers as stereotype examples. The employer assumes an attitude of superiority toward the working class and must live up to his role as the big competent business man who manages his particular industry or corporation better than anyone else could manage it. Is it any wonder that there is constant friction between the two groups, as each group has become so conditioned by its myths, legends, and stereotype examples of the other group?

As a result the laborer hates the capitalist and vice-versa, each one is intolerant of the other. Neither one understands the other's situation adequately enough to improve conditions which are at the present time a handicap to both of them. Much of our present economic distress could be alleviated if we could only eliminate some of the prejudice that has been so conditioned in both individuals. The results of the questionnaire on Capitalism show to what a great extent people were influenced by prejudice, so much so that there was less consistency between tolerance and knowl-

Religious prejudices are as paramount as any other type of prejudices. The same struggle of the in-group versus the out-group with each one trying to feel his superiority gives rise to constant resentment, bitterness, antagonism and rivalry. The Jew thinks that he is superior because he is one of God's "Chosen People" but the Christian looks upon him either as inferior and offensive, or arrogant and officious. The Jew is barred from the exclusive clubs and hotels that the Gentile patronizes. Even in the professional world the Jew feels this pressure against him and often finds it extremely difficult to secure a position especially in the teaching profession. I know of several incidents where Jews felt obliged to change their names to conceal their nationality on account of the strong prejudice against them. As a result we think of the Jew as being an agitator or a radical who should be deported.

When I compared the attitudes of those, whose religious faiths I knew, on Atheism, I discovered that the Protestant in the majority of cases was much more tolerant than the Catholic, showing the significance of the correlation between knowledge and tolerance. The Catholic is much more prejudiced against Atheism than the Protestant, as the former has a great many more stereotype myths and legends to which he has been conditioned. The Protestant has a much greater opportunity to learn something about Atheism, as his religion is less restricting and confining in its teachings. As a result the Protestant is more tolerant in his views on Atheism than the Catholic.

There are other forms of prejudice but I have tried to stress those that have particular bearing on the attitudes of various individuals on the five subjects I have selected; namely, on Socialism, Communism, Atheism, Capitalism, Bolshevism.

Unfortunately our prejudices have increased as society has become more and more complex. Psychology and Sociology are very helpful and valuable in teaching individuals to understand how prejudices may arise and how to be able to analyze the causes of many of them. We all have to learn to defer our judgment, to view all questions from a more logical view point with an attempt to reduce our emotional tendencies to jump at conclusions to a minimum degree. When we have accomplished this, we shall be more broad-minded, liberal, yet critical, in truth saner citizens and will make society a batter place in which to live.

I came across this little poem in my reading which sums up in my mind the definition of prejudice in all its aspects better than anything else I have ever read, or heard:

"Prejudice -
is a judgment unsupported by facts.
is a cheap substitute for an idea.
is an infection of a narrow mind.
is usually a mark of ignorance.
is a sight draft on bigotry.
is an unpardonable sin against honesty."

This discussion on prejudice will show you how closely prejudices and attitudes are allied and to what a great extent attitudes are built up from the different types of prejudices.

In order to have a better understanding of what is meant by the term attitude and just how much it includes it seems wise at this point to define it. I am quoting the best definition I have ever come across: "An attitude is the sum total of a man's inclinations and feelings, prejudice or bias, preconceived notions, ideas, fears, threats, and convictions about any specific topic. Thus a man's attitude about pacifism means here all that he feels and thinks about peace and war. It is admittedly a subjective and personal affair." (3)

Thus a man's at-

Other writers have spoken of attitudes as "mental sets." H. C. Warren has given this definition explaining how attitudes arise: "When a certain type of experience is constantly repeated a change of set is brought about which affects many central neurons and tends to spread over other parts of the central nervous system. These changes in the general set of the central nervous system temper the process of reception; they lead to the formation of certain general modes of receiving and integrating stimuli. A man's attitude toward any situation which confronts him is quite as important a factor in his mental life as the nature of the specific stimuli which enter into that situation. Attitudes alter from time to time with the growth of experience; but changes of attitude proceed far more slowly than changes of specific mental states." (4)

Attitudes then anticipate so much of human behavior. That is why it is very essential that they be recognized in the field of every day life. As Kimball Young so clearly states it: "Attitudes are really forms of habit and bespeak one's actual trends in conduct better than do

A man's attitude toward any situation which confronts him is quite as important a factor in his mental life as the nature of the specific stimuli which enter into that situation. Attitudes alter from time to time with the growth of experience; but changes of attitude proceed far more slowly than changes of specific mental states." (4)

Attitudes then anticipate so much of human behavior. That is why it is very essential that they be recognized in the field of every day life. As Kimball Young so clearly states it: "Attitudes are really forms of habit and bespeak one's actual trends in conduct better than do the verbalized rationalizations which we call opinions. Attitudes thus offer a clue to the unraveling of human motives." (5) What could be of greater value than understanding one's attitudes if it gives us only the slightest insight into the intricacies and complexities of the mind which make human behavior so difficult to analyze?

Now you may inquire what is the relation between opinion and attitude. An opinion is the verbal or written expression of an attitude. In other words, an opinion is the symbol of an attitude. We are therefore more interested in one's attitudes than in one's opinions. Of course, the opinion must not be overlooked as it is through the opinion that we discover the attitude. The difficulty in using the opinion solely as an index of attitude is that the opinion may not be the truth. Even our actions may sometimes conceal or distort our attitudes. Yet according to L. L. Thurstone "It must be recognized that there is a discrepancy, some error of measurement, as it were, between the opinion or overt action that we use as an index and the attitude that we infer from such an index. But this discrepancy between the index and 'truth' is universal. Truth is inferred only from the relative consistency of the several indices, since it is never directly known. As you will see in the conclusion of the investigation used in this particular thesis, I have attempted to determine the different attitudes as expressed by the acceptance or rejection of opinions, or rather let us call it tolerance in relation to the knowledge on the particular subjects. In this investigation let us assume that people have written what they believe even if it can not be definitely proven.

I shall attempt to define tolerance and knowledge briefly so there will be a clearer understanding of what I mean by the two terms and how I graded the questionnaires.

Tolerance represents an attitude of forbearance with reference to views and opinions with which one may not be fully in sympathy. It implies freedom from bigotry. In other words the person who is tolerant toward Socialism may not agree with its principles, but yet will consider them from a broadminded viewpoint and realize these principles may possess certain truths; whereas the person who is intolerant toward Socialism will condemn its principles without any justification. Thus the tolerant individual is openminded and looks at the subject from both angles with a logical, unbiased opinion.

tolerance. This is where knowledge has its connection with tolerance. The most tolerant individual on a certain subject is usually the individual who displays the greatest amount of knowledge on that subject. Adversely, the least tolerant individual usually displays the slightest amount of knowledge.

Now just what do we mean by knowledge?

Knowledge is an act or state of possessing certain facts which we assume to be correct on the particular subject in question. It means having a clear definite perception of the facts. A person's knowledge on a particular subject represents the sum of his information on that subject. The higher the degree of knowledge the more free it is from prejudice and bigotry.

Thus I am contending that a high degree of knowledge should correlate positively with a high degree of tolerance. Adverse opinion, then, which is apt to be intolerant, indicates ignorance or lack of knowledge. After reading the results taken from the questionnaires you will see how significant the correlation is between tolerance and knowledge that serves to describe one's attitude.

After reading the results taken from the questionnaires you will see how significant the correlation is between tolerance and knowledge that serves to describe one's attitude.

The procedure used in determining the relationship between knowledge and tolerance on Socialism, Communism, Atheism, Capitalism, and Bolshevism was, first, a set of twenty-five statements, - five on each of the above mentioned subjects, to be underlined as true or false according to each person's opinion; and, secondly, each person was asked to write a brief essay explaining the principles and policies according to his understanding on each of the five subjects.

There were three distinct groups of people used - namely, fifty High School pupils, fifty College students, and fifty adults, making a total of one hundred and fifty people who answered the questionnaires. Of these one hundred and fifty I have selected ten from each group - thirty - in all - which I am including in this thesis. Fictitious names have been assigned to each paper in order not to disclose any one's identity.

The statements were marked on a scale of 0 to 5 on each subject separately. A score of 0 would mean that the person did not agree with any of the statements in favor of that particular subject. For example, the extreme anti-Socialist would have a score of 0 on the five statements on Socialism, meaning that he was extremely intolerant on that subject; whereas the extreme Socialist would probably have a score of 5, meaning in the latter case that he was extremely tolerant on that subject.

Thus the answering of the statements on the five subjects show the degree of a person's tolerance

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

Socialists are not as radical as some people think. Communists are much more radical. They differ on almost all points in the running of government. The Socialists want, for the time being at least, to run the larger industries of the country. No intention of controlling all industries is shown. They know that they cannot make a complete change in a short time as the Communists wish to do. Mainly, they wish to make standard wages and working hours for the larger industries.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

The Communists are very radical. They want almost everything controlled by the government. In the industries they want it controlled by the government. They want the working days and hours the same for everybody. They will do this even if it takes violence to enfore such things.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

Capitalism is that industries are controlled by a few men who are wealthy. They are called capitalists. They do just about what they wish in regulating the industries. The working man has practically nothing to say, although he is the one that is actually doing the work.

Bolshevists are the most radical of any party. They are like the Communists, but go even farther in their policies. Their policies are to be equal in everything. Besides wanting the government to control the industries, they want the government to control everything. They even want the government to tell the people where to live and what to eat, drink and wear.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

Socialism is a political and economic theory of social reorganization the essential feature of it being the control of economic activities. Socialism originated about 1835, it progressed rapidly under Karl Marx who preached the overthrow of Capitalism and the dictatorship of the proletariat. The word Socialism originated from the English body of Communists and was used by them to designate their own doctrine. The World War split the party into two groups one favoring the war the other against it. The party in the U.S. at that time headed by Eugene Debbs opposed the entrance of the U.S. and its leader was thrown into prison under the Espionage Act. While Debbs was in prison he ran for president and received 919799 votes, this was in 1920. It did not do so well in the following years owing to the fact that the country was enjoying a period of prosperity.

There have been Socialistic government in Denmark and Sweden and there have been Socialist representatives in the government of Belgium. Before the Fschist government came into power in Italy the socialist party was very strong.

Some of the policies of the Socialist party in the last election were as follows:

Unemployment - to aid
$500,000,000 - for the homes of the poor workers, slum clearances, reforestation, road building, legislation providing for the acquisition of land for poor. Abolition of Child Labor. A minimum wage law. Public ownership of Industries such as Railways, oil companies, electric light companies, telephone and telegraph companies and most of the other industries supplying necessities. Higher income tax and inheritance tax, and a tax on all governmental securities. On the liquor question they believe in the government supervision of distributing liquor and the manufacture of such liquors owned and supervised by the government. A Socialist has a definite theory or political program indicating what the result shall be. There is no proof that a socialist type of government could succeed in the U.S. because it has never been tried. But it would surely do away with the graft in the government offices.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Communism is a radical party believing in the public ownership of all industries, both large and small. It hasn't a very great following in the U.S. all though some people believe it has. Its following is among the uneducated working people, and even with them they can not get far.

Communism believes in equality, it is opposite the present system of social organization where power is given to small political units. A Communist has no such theory as the socialist.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

I do not understand the Atheistic policies very well. I believe that an Atheist does not believe in God, and advances beliefs that every one should work for nothing. An Atheist is sort of a hedonistical person.

I do not understand much about the policies of the Bolshevistic type of government. I do know that it is very radical and has some Communistic ideas. It is, I believe, ruled by a proleteriat.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

The Socialist party are going around to the educational schools and colleges to give their ideas on the things they want to do and by doing this it starts the thinking people to think. Each year the candidate from the Socialist party gets more vates and by keeping this up some year to come they will put a Socialist presidant in office. They believe that the only remedy for the evils of society lie in a new socail and economic order in which the wealth of the country should be more just distributed. The public not the capitalists should own the land, railroads, telephone and telegraph lines, milk, factories, banks and power plants. The production of goods should be regulated by the state to fit the needs of the people instead of being determined by the capitalist. In countries where the Socialist party is strong it derives its chief support from the laboring classes and the laborers in this country have not gone over in great numbers to socialism. The leaders of organized labor oppose any kind of labor party. They prefer to throw their strength to a party. The weakness of the Socialist party comes from the fact that it lacks support among the masses of people in the countries.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

A more radical party than the Socialist is the Communist party. It was organized in 1921 as an offshot from the Socialist party. It is international in character and is closely associated with the Communist party of Russia, the party which rules the land of the Soviets. The Communists call for the wiping out of existing governmental machinery in this country and the establishment of a regime like that of Soviet Russia. The Communists would go much farther than the Socialists. They would socialize all industries, large and small; that is, they would provide that public ownership should take the place of private ownership. They believe in a world-wide revolution of workers to overturn capitalist government and to set up communistic government in their places. They emphasize equal rights for the Negroes. The support of the Communists comes wholly from the workers. They have no following among other classes and they have made little headway with the workers.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

They believe that there is no God. The Atheist and Anarchist are sometimes confused but they are not the same, for the latter merely claims that one cannot prove that God exists, or that He does not exist. Belief in a supreme being is so natural to mankind that even those who deny that God exists very often set up some sort of an ideal of their own to take the place of the God they refuse to admit. The term Atheist has been applied very loosely, from earliest times, for in matters of religion the tendency in all ages has been to call a man an atheist who departs from a generally accepted creed. The ancient Greeks imprisoned Socrates for "not believing in the gods the city believes in" and the Romans of Nero's time sent the Christians to their death to the cry of "Away with the Atheists."

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

This is some sort of radical Socialists party in Russia. The name was applied originally to the major and radical wing of the Socialist party as constituted in 1903. They came prominently into world affairs in 1917 when under the leadership of Nikola Lenin (died 1924) and Leon Trotzky, they overthrew the modern Socialist regime of Kerensky who had gained control of the government after the abdication of Czar Nicholas II. The Bolshevists organized the government on the basis of communistic principles for Bolshevism and Communism are essentially the same. The cardinal doctrines of the system are the capture of the means of production and distribution by the proletariat and the permanent dictatorship of the proletariat. To accomplish their purposes Lenin Trotzky used ruthless force causing the execution of over 1,766,000 intellectual and middle class elements suffered especially. The humiliating Treaty of Brest Litovsk was sighed with Germany in 1918 but the subsequent defeat of the Central Powers made the agreement null and void. Today the term bolshevistic is applied in a general way to any radical scheme or party that urges the overthrow of the capitalistic form of government and the substitution of a rule of the workers. Bolshevistic propaganda has made little headway in America.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

The Capitalist bases in economics is wealth, other than land used or intended to be used to produce more wealth. It includes such things as raw materials, factories, machines and tools, railroads and ships and finished goods of all kinds in warehouses and on the shelves of retailers. The term is not as broad as wealth; for only that part of wealth that is used to produce more wealth is capital. The clothes that we wear, the furniture in our homes; and the food on our table are not capital; they are wealth but since they are not used to produce more wealth they are not reckoned as capital. Some persons have expressed themselves as favoring the abolition of capitalism. What they usually have in mind is the abolition of the private ownership of capital, of the means of production, but certainly the abolition of capital, as such is not to be considered even for a moment. Practically no one, no matter how he talks would voluntarily go back to the time when capital was very scarce, let alone practically non existent. We are too accustomed nowadays to an abundent supply of consumable goods to be willing to return to the earlier conditions when even nobility knew not the pleasures of automobiles. These consumable goods are abundant only because of the vast mass of capital that is employed in their production. How has the vast accumulation of capital characteristic of the present day come into existence? It has been created by labor, with the aid of capital and land but an indispensable condition has been the saving of money means. In the earlier days capital creation, a worker who had saved up consumption goods was free to turn his energies to the fashioning of tools. He thereby created capital and by adding to the productivity of his labor was enabled to accumulate a greater surplus of consumption goods, which left him even more time for the creation of additional capital. Thus the process continued though at a comparatively slow rate until the industrial revolution in the last half of the 18th centnry tremendously accelerated the movement. The greater the accumulation of capital the easier the further accumulation of capital. Indispensable to the process of capital creation as it is now carried on is the saving of money means. Persons in the receipt of incomes save a portion thereof by spending less than they receive. These savings may be put in a bank, invested in bonds or stocks or real-estate mortgages, and the like. By one process or another they usually are made available to governments, corporations and individuals who employ them in the further creation of capital. A large part of the savings nowadays is made by the corporations themselves which withhold a portion of the profits from the stockholders and reinvest it in the business. To induce savings to be made a premium has to be paid of course to the savers. Thus arise problems of interest and profits. The capital that was created in the past is eventually consumed.

The aim of Socialism is to do away with capitalism. Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Communism is the belief in control of all industry and commerce by the laboring class. Equal proportionment of wages. No individuality can long prevail for each individual is given a task to perform and little if any choice is permitted. This system is more radically different from our government than is socialism. The poor classes fail to see the falacyin that little terms would exist before unscrupulous men would begin gaining power.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

An Atheist in my opinion is one who firmly believes there is no God whatever. Consequently there is no spiritual control of present conditions nor a "heaven" for departed persons.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

In that a capitalist has money to begin with he is in a more advantageousposition to dictate and be obeyed. His money gives him power and since he controls and regulates wages he can prevent others from rising from the poor classes and because of his money he also can force legislation to coincide with his desires.

Capitalism has no interference by regulative laws of its industry. It maintains control of the masses and industry by a few.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

Socialism in its broader sense believes in public ownership of industry. No opportunity exists for capitalists to ever come into existence. The money in wages is divided proportionally with the ability required but no large salaries exist. The profits of industry are naturally used for governmental expenditures. An advantage comes in the control of production to meet demand. Worthwhile enterprises thus do not suffer from lack of finances by the originator but are government subsidized. The social party of the U.S. is a very modified plan, however, believing in only government control of public utilities and not all commerce.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

Bolshevism believes in the overthrow of government by the poor and the laborers. The government then would not be controlled by the wealthy and cruel aristocracy but rather by the persecuted "forgotten man".

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

Socialism is, in general, the belief that capital, in the economic sense should not be privately owned; the tool of production should be public property. This principle is designed to produce a more even distribution of wealth and, since it offers a means of controlling production, act as a retarding factor in the business cycle. Since the element of profit would to a large extent be removed from industry commodities would tend to be more steady and reasonable in price.

This change of position of the world's capital would also raise the standard of living in other countries, particularly since free trade is involved, until an equilibrium had been reached. The labor would benefit extremely from such an economy.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Communism or state Socialism (Marx) is a drastic change from the capitalistic system. Unlike the Socialists who favor change by legal, regular means the Communists demand an immediate rising of the "Workers" against everyone else, bourgeois, intelligentsia, aristocracy. In effect it amounts to this; the submerged tenth would like to take the place of the top tenth by a see-saw ~~like~~ reversal of place.

Communists believe that personal property is an unholy institution. This, of course, is an impractical proposition. The present Russian upheaval has indicated that within limits, all very well, but some things must be owned including women!

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

Atheism is the term which we apply to that mode of thought which denies completely the existence of a god or gods. In this it is to be carefully distinguished from Agnosticism which is merely a sceptical frame of mind relative to god.

I am unaware of an atheistical evangelical, (paradoxical but true) movement. There have of course been isolated instances of atheist's with the crusading itch, notably Robert Ingersoll, Voltaire and others. Recently much noise was caused by an atheist in Arkansas who with the aid of the Haldeman-Julius family, a group of hack-writers, succeeded in getting himself and his "God is a ghost" placards spread over the newspapers.

Write a brief essay outlining the principles and policies of Athelem as you understand them.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

The first principle of Capitalism is that of "Laissez - faire" or the devil take the hindmost. The belief is that the amassing of great wealth benefits the state and the workers. Another tenet is that legislation in business is unconstitutional if not actually sacreligious. Every man, then, is entitled to become a millionaire by any means so long as he is not caught in an illegal act.

Such a system, of course, places a premium on the one-track mind. The character whose vision is two-dimensional is the most desirable one for such a society.

Capitalism rests on the belief in the validity of personal property. It also believes that property should be inherited.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

Bolshevism is merely the Russian word for their own variation on Communism. It refers to the class war, the proletariat against the bourgeoisie, the workers against the bosses. Bolshevism, as I understand it, is merely the active part of the Communistic movement, with special reference to Russia.

The word has acheived acceptance here because of its barbaric sound.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

Many people confuse the terms Socialism, Communism, Anarchism and Syndicalism. Each party stands for various principles, but in each party there is a different attitude toward the present capitalistic government.

Socialism may be explained as having its origin from Karl Marx's theories. Socialism does not adhere closely to Karl Marx's theory. The Moderates, rejected some of the basic principles, but still held on to Marx's idea of overthrowing the capitalistic government and allowing the industries and all other big enterprises to be under the head of the State or corporation supported by the people.

However, time does not allow me to expand the subject of Socialism and show its origin, differences and principles from Communism, Anarchism and Syndacalism.

I would like to refer you to a book called "How red is America" by Will Irwin. I believe that one will have a keener understanding of Socialism.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

Many people confuse the terms Socialism, Communism, Anarchism and Syndicalism. Each party stands for certain principles, but in each party there is a different attitude toward the present capitalistic government.

Socialism may be explained as having its origin from Karl Marx's theories. Socialists agree yet adhere closely to Karl Marx's theory. The Communists, referred some of the same principles, but still hold on to Marx's idea of overthrowing the capitalistic government and altering the industries and all other big enterprises to be under the care of the State or corporation supported by the people.

However, time does not allow me to argue the merits of Socialism and show its origin. Differences and principles from Communism, Anarchism and Syndicalism.

As I have referred you to Will Irwin's "How red is America" in my previous essay, I shall do so again, because the principles involved are thoroughly explained in that little red book.

Some people confuse communism and anarchism. Anarchists are only a small group. They are out for destruction. For instance the "wall street" explosion, was blamed on an anarchist. The anarchist wants to wipe out completely the present government.

The communist differs from the anarchist. The communist's principles are abolish the present capitalistic government, set up corporations headed by the people instaed of the capitalist and do everything possible to help out the industrial phase for the welfare of the "proleteriat".

Truthfully, I am not able to define the principles of atheism. But as I understand the term atheism, it means that the Atheist doesn't believe in superstition or religion of any sort. Regards that there is no supreme being or Heaven or Hell.

I believe that an Atheist believes in advancing the idea by experimentation, invention, etc.

Some Atheists believe (that is, an atheist that I've talked to) that religion is the superstition and God is a ghost.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

A capitalist is considered a man of wealth and power. That is he controls several industries and newspapers, thus forcing the people to conform to his ideas and appeals to them to consume his goods inspite of its inferior quality and uselessness.

A example of this is the medium of advertising, (in newspapers, magazines, radio, moving pictures, etc.)

The capitalist system is very inefficient. The invention of machinery and efficiency in industries, cutting wages, laying off people from industries, etc., all these factors tend to weaken the position of the capitalist. However, if unemployment continues much longer the capitalist will be regarded as an enemy of the people.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

Socialism, as I understand it, is a form of government that is more suited to the word "Democracy" than any other form of government. It is more closely allied with the interests of the people than our present capitalistic form. Under Socialism all factories, public utilities, banks and other of our American industries would be owned by the Government and run by boards composed of all groups of people, workers, gov. officials and technicians. The people would benefit from this because the profit from the industries would go to the Government and this in turn would be turned back to the people in the form of a high scale of living. Capital would be taxed excessively so that the burden of taxation would fall on the wealthy. There would be no starving millions because when the products of industry are owned by the Government when a condition such as now exists occurs, namely: starvation amidst plenty - the government would be able to feed and clothe the hungry people with the surplus.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Communism has for its principles ~~the~~ same principles of Socialism. However, the only difference lies in the fact that communists try to gain their principles by force. They are desirous of a physical revolution while the socialists are content to force their ideas upon a country through the suffrage. Thus we may say that Communism and Socialism are alike in Principle but differ in their policies of gaining their principles. There is one grave danger in both Socialism and Communism. It leaves too large a temptation to man. In these forms of government the control of the country is highly centralized and allows a large chance at dictatorship as now exists in Russia

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

Atheism, as I understand it, is the doctrine of the refutation of God. The atheist believes that man evolved from animals and that the creation of the universe by some divine being is just a lot of unfounded mythical facts. The atheists believe that science can explain all of the wonders of the world and thus rejects the philosophy of a supernatural being. Atheism also rejects religion in its present form as it is allied with the worship of God. However, I can see how it would be possible to have a religion of my own, were I an atheist. I should be guided by my conscience or "inner light" if it may so be called

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

Capitalism is the system of government where money is the all important factor. In a capitalistic form of government, the man with the money gets ahead. Money is used to make more money and thus the rich grow richer and the poor, poorer. Profits go to the large store owner while the small store keeper has to cut his prices to compete and so lose money on his products. Under a system of Capitalism there are class distinctions based on money. In fact anything that might be said for or against capitalism may be traced to the fact that the whole system is based on money. Individual citizens control large public utilities, which being a natural monopoly, should be owned by the people so that they should not have to pay for products on a competitive basis of production

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

Bolshevism is a form of government that began in Russia after the world war. The only thing I understand about it is that it would do away with our present system of legislative government and substitute in its place a government of the people in form of a few men who shall rule the people supposedly in their interests.

Public ownership, organization and operation of public utilities is one of the principles of Socialism. They would have the government own and operate such things as railroads, banks and mines. He has looked into religion and finds it inadequate to explain those things for which he is seeking an explanation.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

As I understand the policies of Socialism, they work toward a banishment of Capitalism which is monopoly of manufacturing and trade. Socialism means government ownership of all business - public utilities, for example. It would prevent one man from making large profits, leaving less fortunate ones without any profit at all. However, when capitalism is gone, competition is gone.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Communism gives all the power into the hands of the people themselves. The Communists demand that they be taken care of. Communism is well illustrated by the question of unemployment insurance. They demand that they be given their rent, lighting, water, etc. free of charge, besides ~~what~~ a certain amount each week for other necessities

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

Capitalism places the riches and power of a country into the hands of a few. Take the mill-owners, for example. They will not run their mills unless they are sure of their profits first. Thus they guard their own wealth and interests, and leave the thousands of people, dependant on their mills for their very existence, without jobs.

Capitalism takes the form of monopoly also.

However, where there is Capitalism there is Competition, and thus men vie with one another to produce better goods or give better service than their competitors.

Atheism is the lack of belief in God and Immortality. ~~to~~ It is a disbelief definitely stated. The Atheist works toward his own ends without fear of punishment from a divine Being. I would not say that all Atheists are criminals, or that all criminals are Atheists, but I do think generally that Atheism would encourage immorality because ~~of there~~ they are not afraid of the Wrath of God.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

Bolshevism is radicalism. Bolshevists ban together and try to influence people that the social order is all wrong, that they are being cheated ~~fr~~ of their lawful rights. They swear to down the people in power, ~~and~~ in a revolution and taking the gov. in their own hands.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

The basic principle of Socialism, as I understand it, is that inasmuch as the majority of the people engaged in production and distribution are laborers, the businesses should be operated by the laborers, rather than by capitalists; that is, that ~~the~~ labor should hire capital, rather than capital, labor. The proposition seems to be that all human activities should be so conducted that the greatest possible number of people may benefit thereby.

It does not appear to be the policy of Socialism that everyone should share equally the economic benefits, but rather that there should be a more nearly equal reimbursement for productive effort.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Apparently the basic principle of Communism is the equal distribution of economic benefits among all people and the abolition of private property. The Communists seem to believe that every man and woman should receive the same compensation for one day's work, whether he or she be collecting garbage or directing the policies and operations of the state. The Communists fail to recognize the inherent and unavoidable individual differences in man, and believe that all are entitled to share equally in the goods of this world.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

The primary principle of Capitalism is the investiture of the bulk of the wealth of a nation in the hands of those who, by nature of their superior abilities, are best able to handle it. It is the belief of Capitalists that some of us are endowed with the capacity to manage and direct, while some of us are able only to follow a leader, and that, there being a comparative scarcity of the former, they must receive a greater remuneration for their services, according to the law of supply and demand. In as much as innate abilities are not equally distributed, then wealth cannot be so distributed.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

Atheism is not organized into any definite principles and policies, however, I believe that most atheists reason that, the majority of the Bible stories being preposterous, there is, therefore, no God. The atheists believe that man just happened and has no purpose. The atheists are too tired to think. (Conscious of prejudice.)

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

At the beginning I want to say that I do not know very much concerning Socialism. However, I have heard Norman Thomas and other Socialist thinkers, and have a vague idea concerning what their party stands for. I realize there are many forms of socialism, and that there is a great deal of controversy within the party between, say, the English and German and Russian Socialists. As I understand it, there is a vast difference between the extreme views of some of the Marxian followers and Russian Communists, and the more conventional leaders of the Socialist party in the United States.

I believe the party stands for government ownership and controll and operation of public utilities, railroads, etc. (mines, water ways, power and light, telephone, radio and movies (?) and transportation facilities) The principle is to offer a wider and fairer distribution of the wealth and resources of a given country, I think. Their policy would be to have a controll of industry, and whether in further benefit to the working man, or proletariat, they would ~~are~~ plan to have unemployment insurance, as England and Germany use, and old age pensions, sickness insurance etc. I cannot say for certainty.

Their chief aim, as I understand it, is to have a more even distribution of wealth than is possible in a capitalistic society, with benefits to all who participate in the work, and entailing a central plan for all industry. If this is true of Socialism, in its purest form, I believe it will, as they promise, offer a new kind of justice to the working man. There is much else I could mention, that I have heard, but am also uncertain as to the correctness of the information I have received.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

As I understand Communism, as it is now practiced in Russia, of which I have heard a good deal, but know very little, it is quite different from some forms of Socialism. In Russia a very small majority of the people belong to the Communist party, which is in controll today, although practically everyone in the country is allowed to vote. In Russia the government has claimed the land, and turned it over to organized communes of peasants who operate it in large groups. Factories, all resources, amusements, museums, most of the private property and many of the old churches are similarly controlled by this ~~large party~~ small party through the workers.

As they have had an extremely difficult time in taking over so backward a country, it is hard to judge at this transition period just what their final program will be. It is certain at present ~~that the~~ workers are poorly clothed and fed, but it is equally certain that most of the younger members of the party are highly in favor of the Communistic experiment. While they lack freedom in many respects, the workers direct the policies of the factories to a far greater extent than our workers here. They are still allowed to worship, which is often falsely stated, but it is difficult to keep the churches going. I believe the chief thing in its favor is the organized planning the party has undertaken, and the education of the workers (a lot of which is skillful propaganda against capitalism similar to our power trust propaganda here)

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

As I understand Atheism, it, unlike Agnosticism, denies that there is a God of which Christianity is so certain. I believe it also denies immortality. One fault with organized Atheism is that it like Christianity attempts to convert people to its belief. (this has often been said to me, if it is true, I believe it is a fault) I really have had little means of learning much about Atheism.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

Capitalism involves the "laissez faire" policy so cleverly argued by Adam Smith (?) and French writers of the 18th and 19th century. It entails private ownership and operation of the resources of the land. There is, supposedly, to be little government controll of business under this system. It is interesting to note how anxious business is at times like this for government loans, though. Under pure capitalism, it would seem to me that it would be impossible for heirs of wealthy men to lose so much of the inherited fortune as now happens in the U.S. and England. I have heard, I must admit, much more condemnation than explanation of this system.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

I do not know anything at all, really, about Bolshevism. All ~~that~~ I offer here is merely hearsay or a guess. It may mean a very radical form of Socialism, which believes in wiping out the capitalistic governments, the world over, by force. It would be a setting up of Bolshevistic governments everywhere possible, by revolution, rather than such existing political means as McDonald and Norman Thomas would employ. Otherwise, it would seem to be an extreme form of socialism.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

Socialism tends to do away with our present economic condition. Instead of private ownership, socialism stands for public ownership of public utilities etc. The policy of Socialism is not in a revolution but evolution. It aims at a more equal distribution of wealth. Socialists favor unemployment insurance, labor improvements such as minimum wage laws, 5 day-week, 5 hr day, increasing age of child labor from 14 to 16, & decreasing age from 70 - 65 or 60 for old age pensions. Socialism includes taxes on inheritance etc. The common working man is given the most attention and not the rich man.

The Socialists & Communists aim to do away with laissez-faire policy. The difference between the two is in policy. The Communists advocate revolution — not by peaceful means. Communism tends to its program to help the negro. They are for unemployment insurance — public ownership etc.

Communism is much too radical to succeed because it advocates revolution. They favor labor strikes - all kinds of labor revolution — picketing etc. — do away with present system of gov't

Capitalism is the present economic system we have in U.S. Private ownership is major principle. The rich and more successful have greater access to leadership in conducting their own business. Capitalism is supposed to result in more individual freedom — " national integrity."

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

As I understand the principles and policies of Socialism, the advocates of this belief favor a form of government control for industry and for such things as public utilities. It is their wish to do away with the control of the country's wealth and resources by a few people. They desire to abolish any suggestion of social distinctions among people. Under Socialism there would be no lower class, no bourgeois, no aristocracy of wealth or birth. There would be just one class.

The Socialists have no intention of breaking up the home or family as such and there is no reason for supposing that this dissolution would occur.

They advocate such things as unemployment insurance for people who are forced out of work by the enormous increase of machines and other forces which threaten employment of the working people in the country.

They have no wish, so far as I can see it, to abolish churches of any sort simply for the sake of so doing.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Unfortunately I have never heard or read a clear and comprehensive exposition of the tenets of Communism. However, I labor under no delusions as to Communists being bomb-throwers who have long beards and unclean necks who are constantly waving red flags. From the little I have observed, I should say that their idea of the ideal society is one in which there is no private property whatsoever; hence there must be complete governmental control. This elimination of private property would of course do away with such things as social castes. It might — I say only might — have an abolishing effect on churches because most of the churches have property and a form of control which is definitely opposed to Communism. As to its effect on marriage and the home + family I should expect that these would not be held in the same veneration as they are in a so-called Capitalistic Society.

As I understand it (and I don't, really) an Atheist is one who disbelieves in a superhuman Power which controls the universe and the actions of the people and animals in it. I think that they probably believe that Nature controls the universe — most of them probably believe in the evolutionary theory of man and the world — although I have no doubt but that some people who say they are atheists have no conception of the evolutionary theory, etc.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

Capitalism to me means - in its simplest terms - the control of the country's wealth and resources concentrated in a few hands - not necessarily competent ones. In it the government is controlled by "Big Business" with all that that implies. (I am taking America or at least U.S.A. as an example of Capitalism.) Deference is shown to "big men" with "big names" and much wealth. The idea seems to be to get as much from the worker as possible and to give him back as little as possible. Of course, I realize that a large number of people are paid proper wages and work under proper conditions; nevertheless, I still think the preceding statement is true in most cases.

There is a definite caste system although transitions are made from one to the other in certain instances.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

I don't understand the principles and policies of Bolshevism, because everything I have ever read has seemed to me to be prejudiced on one side or another. Of course I know they are not necessarily bombthrowers, etc; and I have no doubt that there are some sincere believers who consider that they have a better plan for society than the existing one. Maybe they have.
I don't believe that they desire the overthrow of everything - home, church, etc.

I'm not sure but I think that socialism means a government run by the people, all having a chose in it - A government not run by capitalists. Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

By Socialism, in current American thinking, is meant those tenets of faith as expressed let us say by Norman Thomas. Norman Thomas hopes to see the gradual socialization of those economic units by means of which the community exists. This end it is important to note is to be achieved by an evolutionary process, not by violence. Public ownership of the Utilities is now on the wing in the Socialist program. This issue however is only the entering wedge which will logically lead to the absorbtion of the railroads, the shipping lines, Steel, and finally every enterprize upon which even the smallest community is dependent upon for its existence

Private homes would not be affected by this program. A private home is not an economic unit. Not only would private homes be exempted but land would also continue under private control, especially agricultural land. Where natural resources such as oil and coal are found the State would assume complete control.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

The key word that leads to an intelligent appraisal of Communism is "Revolution." Where Socialists talk about a peaceful evolution in our social structure the communists wildly brandish the flaming torch of Revolution. The worker is exhorted to overthrow "the bosses;" the intellectual is exhorted to overthrow the Bourgeoise and their culture.

Communists are inspired by the writings of Karl Marx. Marx pictures the evils of Capitalism in the worst possible light. The worker is submerged deeper and deeper in poverty and squalor. When finally the absolute limit of human endurance has been reached the desperate worker turns upon his enemies and completely destroys Capitalism and its culture. The Church is one of the institutions which has given its moral support to the practices of Capitalism. This explains the opposition to the Church in Russia today.

Communism is a more drastic measure than Socialism. All property, homes and land included, would be confiscated by the State under Communism. With every activity of the individual under the surveillance of State it is not surprizing to find the regimentation of life we see in Russia today.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

Atheists, like their closest kin the devout religionists, are essentially men of faith. Every religion assumes a Supreme Being. This Supreme Being may be pictured in the anthropomorphic shape of "de Lawd" of "Green Pastures" or he may answer the sublime conceptions of Spinoza and Hegel. A deep and abiding belief in either of these conceptions is realized only thru faith; neither of these concepts can be proven.

The Atheist on the other hand exhibits a blind faith as he essays to "refute" the existence of all Gods. He "unmasks" the Bible; he points to the horrors of the Inquisition; he calls religion a "superstition" and God a "tyrant." He boldly describes himself as a "Freethinker." when he gets thru we are forced to admit that the Christian Church is pretty bad, that Christians are very narrow minded and that something ought to be done about it. Our deeper philosophical problems are never touched by the Atheist. If no Supreme Mind exists how did Mind ever evolve? Blind Force and Matter could never evolve Mind for Mind is superior to Force and Matter.

Atheism, in short, is bankrupt as far as its philosophical content is concerned. Its chief value is in ridding the Church of its theological anachronisms.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

Herbert Hoover summarized the case for capitalism when he coined the phrase "rugged individualism." The elder George F. Baker made a notable contribution to Capitalist literature when he said in the face of a State investigation in New York "It's none of the Public's business what I do." Capitalism frankly assumes that selfish motives have to be appealed to if men are to contribute their best to the public good. The exploitation of the natural resources of this country afforded a fertile field for this philosophy. The rise of the Rockefellers and the Vanderbilts, Carnegie and Frick, Hill and Morgan are legends in Capitalist literature. As the Industrial Expansion began to wane and our society became more stable it became necessary to modify the crass philosophy of an earlier day. Hence the rise of what Mencken calls "the Sob Sisters of Service." He profits most who serves best" became the slogan of the Business man.

Capitalism at the present time is on the defensive. Russia constitutes a distinct threat to its very existence. The challenge is being met by a steady retreat toward Socialistic measures.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

Bolshevism is a form of communism. All Bolshevists are Communists, but all Communists are not Bolshevists. The Russian government has always been a Dictatorship. The Czar and his cohorts represented an Absolute Autocracy. Today, under the auspices of the Bolshevik Party, the Russian people bow to the Dictatorship of the Proletariat.

The Five year Plan represents an integrated effort on the part of the Government to harness the resources of the country to a definite goal. This program was feasible however only by subsidizing the agricultural resources of the country. The resistance of the peasants to all this was so bitter that as early as 1921 Lenin was forced to compromise to the extent of permitting the peasants to sell some of their products on the open market. All this emphasizes the point all ready made that Russia today is a Dictatorship. The Proletariats belong to the Bolsheviki Party. Theoretically Communism should abolish all class distinctions. This has not occurred in Russia as yet.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

A community run under the principles of socialism would differ greatly from our present capitalistic system.

The elected or appointed government would be in complete control of the distribution of property of all kinds as well as all profits derived from all industry, agriculture and labor.

The profits would in turn (theoretically) be redistributed among the people and thereby everyone would share alike in the profits of all.

The government which would rule over this system would (theoretically) be chosen by the people. In practice however it would probably represent the interests of a strong group who would maintain control by force if necessary.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Communism in my conception is very similar to Socialism in that all property is turned over to the community and the benefits derived from this properties are turned over to the community for the benefit of all.

Each community would have it's local government to manage and answerable to the Federal government thru this local representation.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

Capitalism may be said to be the control of money & real capital over everything else.

Those who have capital power are in a position to dictate; control; hire & fire - and in general rule as they wish - (in the business world); and in many cases unfortunately they exert strong pressure on our officials both local state and national for their own good.

It is a question just how long labor and the farmer will stand for this one sided influence.

Let us hope that when a change is forced that the next element, to come in power will have a definite program arranged before the change is made.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

The principles of Bolshevism in theory run parallel to Socialism except that they are towards the radical side.

The policy which they followed was to enforce their desires by creating terror in the minds of those upon whom they were working.

They had a short but very decided influence in 1917. This short reign was ended when the stabiler policies and groups over came the first terroristic influences of the Bolshevik group.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

Socialism means the ownership and control of the means of production by the community, or nation, as a whole. Socialism would insure to every worker the full value of what he produces or helps to produce. It would in its most ideal state give every man and woman not only work but the opportunity to work at the job he is best suited for. There would be no parasites under such a system of national industrial control, living from the products of other people's labor. This does not mean that there would be no leisure but rather that the instruments of production would be used to create more leisure for everybody, rather than (as now) a superabundance of leisure for the few and over work for the many, with its attendant ills of unemployment and public charity. There could be no charity since every child would be properly supported not in proportion to the means or ability of its parents, but according to the general prosperity and actual wealth of the state.

Under our present social and economic system, the invention and use of new machinery creates technological unemployment even in times of prosperity, and results in times of depression in acute poverty for the masses. This cannot continue as depressions, as such, are inherent in the capitalist system and tend not only to impoverish the worker but also to lower his standard of living among the so-called upper and middle classes so that eventually the control of industry would become centralized in the hands of a very few while the proletariat would increase.

As a woman, speaking to another woman, may I add that socialism would make it possible for every child to be born under proper conditions; for that child to be brought up with sufficient Grade A milk, cod liver oil, fresh air, and sunshine to enable it to become a healthy, happy and useful citizen? And that the child would be educated to the extent of its abilities? Only the children of our wealthiest families now have such opportunity. Yet the argument for ~~ever~~ our present system is often given that capitalism gives every child an equal chance in life. Obviously that is not true, but under socialism it would be true.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

As an agnostic, I understand that Atheism is a theory of absolute godlessness; that atheists flatly contradict the idea not only of a personal God, but of any God at all. In the main, they are a fairly decent, law abiding set of citizens who have discovered that they have grown strong enough in themselves no longer to need the crutch of religion to lean upon. Generally their policy is to leave others alone to their faiths and beliefs, with perhaps a little argument thrown in now and then for good measure.

A lot of good socialists are Christians.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Communism as I understand it is the policy of state ownership and control of all the means of production, including farm property. Communism believes in collectivization of property and I think in its most highly developed state aims to get rid of both real and private property. There is no communistic society today (Soviet Russia being a beaureaucratic form of government) except perhaps in small, well-knit communities in the South Sea Island. See "Coming of Age in Samoa" by Margaret Meade.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

Bolshevism is the majority party, now in control in Soviet Russia, and judging from certain communistic speakers with whom no socialist could absolutely agree, the current Bolshevists believe in a world-wide revolution by a violent overthrow of existing governments.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

Capitalism in its inception had no principles. It was an outgrowth of feudalism, bolstered up somewhat by the Industrial Revolution, at which time sufficient groups of people had been separated already from land and tools - the means of production - to create a surplus labor market and enable the owners of the means of production to use them as commodities, leaving the workers at the mercy of the so-called law of supply and demand.

Capitalism is no system but merely an ancient predatory method of taking as much as you can get in any way that you can get it. Since industry controls law-making, it naturally can operate legally as far as it chooses.

Read Kapital by Karl Marx if you ever have time.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

Capitalism is its Innovation and no criticism. It was an outcrowth of feudalism, bolstered by mercantilism, the industrial revolution, or while the artificial groups of people had been accumulated already from land and tools - the means of production - to create a complete labor market and create the income of the owner of production to use this as capitalism. Leaving the workers it the labor of the no-relief law of supply and demand.

Capitalism is no system but merely an ancient primitive method of taking as much as you can get in any way that you can get it. Since industry controls labor, it practically has opposite legality as far as it chooses.

Does Capital by fear that if you ever have time.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

I suppose a pretty good way to define Socialism as we have it, or are confronted with its impending shadow, in the United States today would be to picture it as the direct opposite of the "Laissez-faire" theory on which this country has attained the ultimate peak of material civilization.

The proponents of Socialism deny that the best interests of humankind are promoted by unrestricted competition for profit. Rather do they envisage a national community motivated by coordination in work, not for profit, but for Use. Socialism thus is both a political and an economic theory: Believing economically that the opportunities of life and the rewards of labor shall be equitably distributed in fact---not as we have them in our Declaration and Constitution in theory only--the Socialists are forced to a corresponding political concept. In order that opportunities and rewards may actually be shared by the community as a whole, the community cannot be left to its own individual devices (as by the Laissez-faire method of capitalism) but must be planned and controlled by the community itself.

In a word, Socialism substitutes the General Welfare for Individual Aquisitiveness as the goal of the national life.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Communism might be defined as strong Socialism, or Socialism carried to its most radical extent. The central idea is the ownership of all property in common. In so far, therefore, as the Union of Socialistic Soviet Republics does not recognize any individual rights to property it is Communistic.

Socialism does not go so far as to deny rights to property but holds that property shall be run or administered not so much for profit as for the general good and the communal use. Communism goes a step farther in denying any property rights to private persons.

In a communistic State large powers are given not, as with us, to the central government but to many small groups or communes which own and use everything in common.

At the present time all of Western Europe and the United States, as well as Latin America, the British Dominions and Japan are arrayed in political principle against Russia. The last named nation is Communistic or "Red." The others, indeed all the other powers and nations of the earth, are capitalistic in their economic structure.

This is why Russia is so generally feared. Communism is also making headway in China today, shows its head in Japan and has made long strides in Germany since the war. A society sick of capitalistic selfishness turns towards what appears to be a squarer deal.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

I shouldn't say that Atheism had any policies as it is not a political distinction. Atheism is the negation of God or godliness. It is therefore the principle that this universe came into being and now persists without a Supreme Being or Intelligence which defines the cult. Atheism is founded upon the principle that "There is no God."

The U.S.S.R. is now an atheistic State inasmuch as the Soviets recognize no religion beyond patriotism; they acknowledge no Supreme Being. There may be, it is true, some policy in this negation since the Soviet believes in making the emotional nature of its citizens respond to national inspiration and therefore develops a more practical citizenship in peace or war---Perhaps!

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

Capitalism does not now have the same meaning that it did during the XIXth century when it came into full flower. Roughly defined it means a system in which the means of production, such as mines, factories, farms, railroads, are privately owned and administered while the profits accruing from them go also to private persons.

Within comparatively recent years the ownership of wealth-producing properties has been widely extended by the rise of the investor class through the stock-market. The principle however remains the same. Individuals---a very small proportion of the population, say from 2 to 10 per cent---own and operate and get the profits. This is in opposition to the socialistic system whereby the State or community own and operate properties for the common good.

Post-war United States is the arch example of a capitalistic State. And look where it has brought us! In his address before Washington and Lee University a few years ago President Patton of Princeton spoke of this selling of the national birth-right for a mess of pottage as "the greatest tragedy of history."

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

Bolshevism can only be defined in Russian terms since it is a Russian word brought into international use to describe a political phenomenon taking place in Russia in November 1917.

The strict meaning of the word, literally "the larger", (or, rather, the idea of largeness, "Bolsheviki" meaning the larger) correctly translates the November Revolution whereby the majority in Russia, the theretofore buried proletariat, took charge of government.

In use, however, the term has acquired a larger connotation. Primarily it meant the more radical wing of the Social Democratic party. We must not forget that modern Russia is technically the "Union of Socialist Soviet Republics". But in the working out of the new order, whereby the majority radical wing obtained dominance, terrorist tactics were generally used and the proletariat gained control and maintained it by violence. The summary methods used by the U.S.S.R. today in the administration of justice and order, in the carrying out of arbitrary law, have established this violence so that today, in defining Bloshevism, we should come pretty near the political fact in saying that it was the violent rule of the majority as exemplified in Russia.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Socialism as you understand them.

Socialism as I understand it is a modified form of Communism and less radical in its principles. The socialists do not believe in drastic measures such as strikes, bomb throwing and revolutions, but think that some day their principles and policies will be adapted when the people are educated to their beliefs.

Socialism also does not mean that all private property should be confiscated, but that there should be state or government ownership of all forms of business whereby all those connected with it could profit accordingly to their services instead of a select few as we have under the capitalistic system -

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Bolshevism as you understand them.

Bolshevism as I understand it is a Russian word and is the form of government existing in Russia at the present time- Trotsky and Lenine probably were the two most influential leaders of the Russian Revolution and were responsible for the Bolshevistic form of government which resulted after the revolution-

Of all forms of government with the exception of Anarchism Bolshevism seems to be the most radical and violent- The pendulum has almost swung too far from a monarchistic form of government to one which is very near chaos-

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Communism as you understand them.

Communism as it exists to-day has departed widely from its original principles as advocated by Karl Marx. The word has been so abused and misused that even many communists don't understand the underlying principles.

From the derivation of the word we know that "Communism" means pertaining to the people rather than a select few. All should have an equal chance in the commune and all should share equal benefits.

The communists are more violent in their methods and are more willing to use force rather than persuasion as advocated by the Socialists.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

Atheism as I understand it is the disbelief in God or in any diety. For God the atheists have substituted what they call Matter or Force which they think controls the universe. Atheism also refutes the idea of immortality or any future life.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Capitalism as you understand them.

Capitalism is a system whereby the capital is controlled by a very small percentage of people. By capital we mean money or some other commodity representing power and wealth, which is used to produce greater power and wealth.

The present policy of Capitalism seems to be the convergence of capital into the hands of an increasing smaller number of people with the result that the majority of people are becoming more and more handicapped by the system.

Write a brief essay defining the principles and policies of Atheism as you understand them.

Atheism is a denial of or disbelief in the existence of God. The statements in the "true and false" section of this paper would seem to indicate that atheism has a tremendous number of adherents. That this is true, I very much doubt. In my opinion, the measure of belief in God depends entirely on the interpretation of the term "God". That there are many who do not believe in the God of the Middle Ages, or even the God of our churches today —, I am quite ~~so~~ certain. Few of these would deny that there is some power, mind, plan — or what you will — behind the universe. Yet if he refuses to call that "God", he must needs term himself an "atheist." It is my firm belief that few, if any, literal Atheists exist. Certainly no one who has even skimmed the surface of Chemistry, or Astronomy, or Biology can deny that there is a supreme power and mind far beyond the comprehension of man. This he must acknowledge, and whether or not he chooses to call it God is of little importance.

A rough sketch of the method of treatment of the material may be useful:

The data were presented in the form of scores made by members of three groups (H.S., Ad., Co.) up on pairs of tests (To., Kn.) presented in a battery of five units (BOL., COM., ATH., CAP., BOL.). In addition to obtaining the various values for these classifications, new distributions were made to enable the calculation of corresponding terms for Tot. (Total distribution when scores made by all subjects irrespective of Group are subsummed under the proper heading), and TOTAL (The distribution when the summation was with respect to the members of the battery of tests; i.e., TOTAL represents the average of the respective scores of a given member of a given group without regard to in which test the score was made.)

Table 1 presents the Arithmetic Means within the various classifications, i.e., the average score of the scores subsummed under the respective heading. The formula: $M = \frac{\Sigma x}{N}; \frac{\Sigma y}{N}$

Table 2 presents the Standard Deviations, which represent the amount of dispersion of the scores within the respective set of data; i.e., the regularity or uniformity of distribution of scores about the mean. The formula: $\sigma = \sqrt{\frac{\Sigma d^2}{N}}$

Table 3 presents the coefficients of correlation, calculated to four significant places by means of the product-moment formula: Correlation is with respect to scores under the headings TOL. and Kn.

$$r = \frac{\Sigma xy}{N \sigma_x \sigma_y}$$

It is generally assumed that coefficients determined by the product-moment formula cannot signify accuracy beyond two decimal places, so that the use of four places assumes greater precision than is warranted by the construction of the procedure. Table 4 presents the refined coefficients, and also their probable errors,

CONCLUSION

After comparing the results on Table I which gives the Arithmetic Means on both tolerance and knowledge you will note that the Adult group displayed the highest total on the average of the five subjects in respect to knowledge which was 2.47 whereas the College group displayed the highest total in respect to tolerance which was 2.97.

We might have expected the College group to have ranked higher than the Adult group in respect to knowledge under ordinary circumstances, but in this case the Adult group was a very heterogeneous and highly selected group. I shall give a brief table showing the status of the Adult group which will probably explain why the adult group ranked higher than the College group.

It is also significant to note on Table I that the Adult group had its highest rating and also the highest of the three groups in respect to knowledge on Capitalism. This was perhaps due to the fact that there were thirteen men and eight women engaged in business enterprises of some type on this group where they hear Capitalism praised and condemned.

It is just as significant to note on Table I that the College Group had its highest rating and the highest of the three groups in respect to knowledge on Atheism probably due to the fact that after taking courses in Philosophy and Psychology college students are less susceptible to prejudice on atheism and have learned more about it than either of the other two groups.

As it would be expected the High School group had the lowest total of the three groups in respect to both tolerance and knowledge on the average of the five subjects. Yet if you compare the figures 0.56 which the High School group received on Bolshevism with 0.54 which the College group received on Bolshevism you will see that the High School group rated .02 point higher. The only way I can account for the slight difference in favor of the High School group is that there were sixteen who received a score of zero as they had written nothing on the subject and eleven with a score of -1 for an entirely incorrect essay as compared with only 10 in the College group with a score of zero and fifteen with a score of -1, which would make the College result slightly lower as -1 was rated as lower than zero on the calculations.

As it would be expected the High School group had the lowest total of the three groups in respect to both tolerance and knowledge on the average of the five subjects. Yet if you compare the figures 0.66 which the High School group received on Polytheism with 0.86 which the College group received on Polytheism you will see that the High School group rated .08 point higher. The only way I can account for the slight difference in fav-or of the High School group is that there were sixteen

Looking at the totals of the five subjects in respect to both tolerance and knowledge you will notice that Socialism had the highest total - a total of 3.01 on tolerance and a total of 2.47 on knowledge which represents less than a fair degree of knowledge on the subject by the three groups. The rating on Socialism was higher than on any of the other subjects as Socialism has been more widely discussed than any of the other subjects especially prior to presidential election last fall. Norman Thomas has been such an outstanding figure the last few years that his personality has probably inspired many oral and written discussions in favor of and against Socialism. In other words there have been stronger mental pictures of Socialism built up in the mind than about any of the other subjects. The High School and College groups had the same rating on tolerance which was rather singular; although the correlation of the High School group between tolerance and knowledge was less significant as you will see discussed later in connection with tables III and IV.

Atheism had the second highest total in re-

who received a score of zero as they had written nothing on the subject and eleven with a score of -1 for an entirely incorrect essay as compared with only 10 in the College group with a score of zero and fifteen with a score of -1. which would make the College result slightly lower as -1 was rated as lower than zero on the calculations.

Looking at the totals of the five subjects in respect to both correctness and knowledge you will notice that Socialism had the highest total - a total of 3.01 on totals- and a total of 2.47 on knowledge which represents less than a fair degree of knowledge on the subject by the three groups. The rating on Socialism was higher than on any of the other subjects as Socialism has been more widely dis- cussed than any of the other subjects especially prior to Presidential election last fall. Norman Thomas has been such an outstanding figure the last few years that his personality has probably inspired many oral and written discussions in favor of and against Socialism. In other words there have been stronger mental pictures of Social- ism built up in the mind than about any of the other sub- jects. The High School and College groups had the same rating but difference which was rather singular: although the correlation of the High School group between difference and knowledge was less significant as you will see discussed later in connection with tables III and IV.

Atheism had the second highest total in respect to both tolerance and knowledge - a total of 3.00 on tolerance and 2.27 on knowledge. As was said previously the College group not only had the highest score on both tolerance and knowledge but also had the highest rating of any of the five subjects on Atheism; namely, a score of 4.50 on tolerance and 2.98 on knowledge. Yet the total scores on Atheism were lower than the scores on Socialism on account of the comparatively low scores of the High School group - 1.58 on tolerance and 1.32 on knowledge.

The third highest total was on Capitalism - in respect to both tolerance and knowledge. The correlation of tolerance and knowledge will be discussed later as the results on Capitalism seem to be the least satisfactory of the five subjects.

In respect to tolerance the fourth highest total was on Bolshevism, but in respect to knowledge the fourth highest total was on Communism; whereas the lowest total in respect to tolerance was on Communism and the lowest total in respect to knowledge was on Bolshevism. It is natural I think that the lowest total on knowledge was on Bolshevism - a total of 1.02 as after all the term has been used so vaguely and incorrectly that we have built up faulty mental pictures of it in our minds.

The total score on all subjects by the three groups was a score of 2.36 on tolerance and 2.00 on knowledge which is most convincing that people know very little about any of these subjects and that their respective opinequal to both attendance and knowledge - a total of 8.00 on attendance and 2.27 on knowledge. As was said previously the college group not only has the highest score on both total attendance knowledge but also had the highest rating of any of the five subjects on Atheism; namely, a score of 4.50 on attendance and 2.38 on knowledge. Yet the total scores on Atheism were lower than the scores on Socialism on account of the comparatively low scores of the High School group - 1.86 on attendance and 1.32 on knowledge.

The third highest total was on Capitalism - in respect to both attendance and knowledge. The correlation of attendance and knowledge will be discussed later as the results on Capitalism seem to be the least satisfactory of the five subjects.

In respect to attendance the fourth highest total was on Malthusianism, but in respect to knowledge the fourth highest total was on Communism; whereas the lowest total in respect to attendance was on Communism and the lowest total in respect to knowledge was on Malthusianism. It is natural I think that the lowest total on knowledge was on Malthusianism - a total of 1.02 as after all the term has been used so vaguely and incorrectly that we have built up really mental pictures of it in our minds.

The total scores on all subjects by the three groups was a score of 2.36 on attendance 3.00 on knowledge which is most convincing that people know very little about any of these subjects and that their respective opinions are of very slight value.

Let us turn back to Table II which will give us the standard deviations on all subjects in respect to both tolerance and knowledge, which means the regularity or uniformity of distribution of scores about the mean.

There was the greatest deviation on both tolerance and knowledge on the part of the Adult group, probably because it was such a diversified group, being composed of people of varying ages professions and from different localities, having different prejudices and different stereotype examples.

The College group showed the smallest deviation on both tolerance and knowledge, indicating it was much more of a uniform group in respect to its tolerance and knowledge and had been more or less influenced by the same type of prejudices and stereotype patterns.

We have still the most significant table of all to consider which will show you the significance of the correlation between tolerance and knowledge. On Table IV which gives the refined coefficients of correlation and also their probable errors.

First of all we shall compare the coefficients on each subject. The highest and most significant coefficient was on Socialism and still more significant is the fact that the Adult group had the highest coefficient of the three groups which establishes the fact that the tions are of very slight value.

Let us turn back to Table II which will give us the standard deviations on all subjects in respect to both tolerance and knowledge, which means the regularity or uniformity of distribution of scores about the mean.

There was the greatest deviation on both tolerance and knowledge on the part of the Adult group, probably because it was such a diversified group, being composed of people of varying ages professions and from different localities, having different prejudices and different stereotype examples.

The College group showed the smallest deviation on both tolerance and knowledge, indicating it was much more of a uniform group in respect to its tolerance and knowledge and had been more or less influenced by the same type of prejudices and stereotype patterns.

We have still the most significant table of all to consider which will show you the significance of the correlation between tolerance and knowledge. On Table IV which gives the refined coefficients of correlation and also their probable errors.

First of all we shall compare the coefficients on each subject. The highest and most significant coefficient was on Socialism and still more significant is the fact that the Adult group had the highest coefficient of the three groups which establishes the fact that the higher the coefficient of correlation is the higher the degree of knowledge. The College group had the second highest coefficient and the High School group the lowest coefficient both in proportion to their score on knowledge. In other words the three groups not only knew more about Socialism but they were more consistent in their treatment of it in respect totoleranceand knowledge and were less influenced by prejudice than on any of the other subjects.

Let us compare the second highest coefficient which was on Bolshevism, and here again we find the Adult group having the highest coefficient of the three groups. The High School group having the second highest coefficient and the College group having the lowest coefficient again both in proportion to their score on knowledge.

The third highest coefficient was on Communism and we find that the Adult group is the only group whose coefficient has any particular significant correlation; as the College group has such a small coefficient it has only a slight significance, and the coefficient of the High School group which was -.01 couldn't be considered as significant at all.

Comparing the totals of the coefficients of Atheism and Capitalism we see that they are both insignificant and can not be considered as showing any good correlation betweentoleranceand knowledge on these two sub-higher the coefficient of correlation is the higher the degree of knowledge. The College group had the second highest coefficient and the High School group the lowest coefficient both in proportion to their score on knowledge. In other words the three groups not only knew more about Socialism but they were more consistent in their treatment of it in regard to tolerance and knowledge and were less influenced by prejudice than on any of the other subjects.

Let us compare the second highest coefficient which was on Bolshevism, and here again we find the Adult group having the highest coefficient of the three groups. The High School group having the second highest coefficient and the College group having the lowest coefficient again both in proportion to their score on knowledge.

The third highest coefficient was on Communism and we find that the Adult group is the only group whose coefficient has any particular significant correlation; as the College group has such a small coefficient it has only a slight significance, and the coefficient of the High School group which was -.01 couldn't be considered as significant at all.

Comparing the totals of the coefficients of Atheism and Socialism we see that they are both insignificant and can not be considered as showing any good correlation between tolerance and knowledge on these two subjects.

On Atheism the only coefficient that is at all significant is the coefficient of the Adult group; but as the coefficient of both the College and the High School have no significance at all, the total of the coefficient of the three groups is too low to have any significance.

The coefficients on Capitalism are still less significant than those on Atheism. None of the three groups had a coefficient of any significance, consequently the total which is +.01 has no significance at all. Either the true and false statements were ambiguous and misleading or the factor of prejudice was so strong that there was less consistency betweentoléranceand knowledge than on any of the other subjects.

Yet the total coefficients of the three groups are all significant. The High School group having the least significant of the three, + .19 as we should expect, the College group having the next significant coefficient, +.41 and the Adult group having the most significant coefficient +.63.

The coefficients on Christian are still less significant than those on Atheism. None of the three groups had a coefficient of any significance, consequently the total value is +.01 has no significance at all. Either the true and false statements were ambiguous and misleading or the subject of religion was so strong that there was less correlation between attitude and knowledge than on any of the other subjects.

Yet the total coefficients of the three groups are all significant. The High School group having the least significant of the three, +.12 as we should expect, the College group having the next significant coefficient, +.21 and the Adult group having the most significant coefficient +.53.

The total coefficient of + .40 which represents the total of the five subjects and the final average of the three groups is high enough to be considered as showing a significant correlation betweentoleranceand knowledge. Furthermore this result will prove I hope, that the investigation has not been entirely futile and I can still contend that there is a strong correlation betweentoléranceand knowledge which has to be considered as an important feature in the structure and analysis of attitude.

RESUME

"There is one only good, namely, knowledge; and one only evil, ignorance." - Socrates.

This investigation has not been carried on for the purpose of portraying one's knowledge or one's lack of knowledge on these five subjects, but solely to show the various attitudes and how they had been constituted.

As was stated in the Introduction, an opinion is merely the verbalization of an attitude, and tolerance is a disposition to tolerate opinions, beliefs, and practices, with an open mind, free from bigotry. That is why, by attempting to show the correlation between tolerance and ignorance, or lack of knowledge, you will observe how the attitudes have been formed on these particular subjects.

If I had chosen five other subjects the results might have been slightly different, although I doubt it. For after all we must realize that the same factors make up our attitudes on all subjects; namely, prejudice, personal feelings or reactions, and ideas that may be right or wrong according to our own interpretations. Most of the statements which were answered as either true or false appealed to the emotions rather than to reason. It is extremely difficult to look upon statements of that type impersonally and consider them from an unbiased, logical, scientific viewpoint. He who does is in the minority as can readily be seen after reading the questionnaires. The majority of the people who received a low score on tolerance also received a low score on knowledge, showing that they were prejudiced against something about which they had very little knowledge.

The Psychologist realizes more and more the importance of studying attitudes in an attempt to understand many of the aspects of human behavior. It is his mission, then, to teach the layman to understand not only his own attitude and how it has been influenced but also to attempt to understand the attitude of others. When this may be accomplished we shall see ignorance and prejudice disappearing, opinions will have much more value than they do at the present time, and we shall become tolerant. We shall find out just how much we know on certain subjects and we shall be able to increase our knowledge when we realize how we have been influenced and handicapped by our present attitudes.

With the permission of the writer I shall quote part of a letter I received from a member of the adult group who answered one of the questionnaires:

"I am enclosing the questionnaire with an apology for the slight knowledge displayed in my answers. The attempt to answer as well as I was able at present has led me into a field of reading which heretofore I have barely touched but which I now hope to cover more thoroughly from time to time. These 'isms' present a live interest, do they not?"

In the words of Socrates "It is no shame for a man to learn that which he knoweth not whatever be his age."
